The Owingsville Outlook.

VOL. XXV. OWINGSVILLE, KENTUCKY, THURSDAY, JULY 23, 1903. NO. 2

GOING TO MOVE.

I have rented a store-house in Flemingsburg, Ky., and will open up business there on August 1st, 1903. From now until I move I will sell anything in my large stock at cost. I would rather have the cost in cash than move them. I can replace them with less trouble and you get the benefit of goods without profit. I have a nice stock of new, fresh goods, and if you need Dry Goods, Clothing, Shoes, Hats or Notions I can save you at least 25 per cent., sometimes more. Don't miss this chance.

JAMES GILLON.

J. A. BARNES, Chairman.
REUBEN GUDGELL, Secretary.

OLD PAPERS.—MRS. W. W. Barnes of Salt Lick, favored us with a copy of the Owingsville Inquirer of Sept. 22, 1871, the Bath County News of June 5, 1872, ditto of July 15, 1874, and The Outlook of Dec. 6, 1883. They are all newsy and interesting also when they were fresh from the press, as they tell of forgotten incidents and people who have passed from the stage of life forever. They show, too, that nothing could be more appreciated by the generations to come, than a file of local papers carefully preserved.

LYNCHED THACKER.—Wednesday morning about 1 o'clock, July 15th a mob of 25 to 50 persons overpowered Jailer Morris at the Flemingsburg jail, took Thacker from his cell, Thacker end hanged him to a shade tree within the town limits. Thacker yelled and fought and was roughly handled before he was hanged. Young people returning home from a dance in town that night were held up by the mob until their act was finished.

Thacker killed young John Gordon nearly three years ago, raising a row with him without any provocation, on the streets of Flemingsburg. The row was twice, each trial resulting in a life sentence, the case each time being reversed on appeal.

DYNAMITE ACCIDENT.—On Monday of last week Lee Hendrix, Hendrix and Chas. Hamilton were blasting rock in a pool being dug on the former's place, in the northern part of this county in charge of ten sticks of dynamite was being tamped rather vigorously with a drill by Horsebach. Wm. Hornbeck, father of the latter, on account of the danger had retired to the hillside some distance away. The blast went off prematurely and shocked the three men dangerously. When the smoke cleared away, others got to them Leslie Hendrix was over the fence at some distance, but he doesn't know whether he was blown there or ran there. The other two were blown only a few feet. Leslie had no wounds, but his eyes were effected and he was sick at the moment. Joe had a gash in his chin, one in his cheek and one in his temple, and one of his ankles was broken. Hornbeck had his hands severely torn and one eye affected. All three men were able to walk. Neither will likely lose his eyesight. The blast had torn up the rock without scattering fragments, which was lucky for the men.

TOO FREE WITH WEAPON.—Benjamin Helphenstein attended the Morehead - Owingsville baseball game last Thursday. Going out of town late in the afternoon he met Mrs. Ray Patterson and Mrs. Ford Patterson and fired off his pistol a number of times, to their great alarm. Officers went after and arrested him. A fine was fined $50 for shooting on the public highway and held as a concealed-weapon charge. He has been in jail ever since. He was a soldier in the Philippines and a second lieutenant in Co. C, 3d Kentucky Regiment, during the Spanish war.

AT THE CONVENTION.—R. Gudgell says that he has attended, with but two exceptions, all of the State Republican conventions held during the past thirty-five years, and the one held on the 15th and 16th inst. was decidedly the largest and best representation of the State organization. It was clearly demonstrated that ex-Governor Bradley is the foremost man and the ideal of the party in the State. The Louisville delegation was smirched with Democratic manners of selection, but for which Col. Belknap seemed not to be personally responsible. The ticket was well distributed in the State; the friction engendered will soon pass away, and it is well demonstrated that the ticket will be a strong one. Mr. Gudgell was one of the vice-presidents.

SENT TO ASYLUM.—Lizzie McCue, of [illegible] sent to the [illegible] of Judge J. [illegible] burg, and [illegible] as a cold and [illegible] in [illegible] jelned t[illegible] ed the g[illegible] the regi[illegible] conduct [illegible] battle o[illegible] ried som[illegible] Weicot [illegible] recent re[illegible] he figure [illegible] of his m[illegible] at San Francis[illegible] ions he was [illegible] wife believ[illegible] was [illegible] k him. She is now on a [illegible] Dodge Mcnoe, at Sharpsburg.

EVE FOR REMOVAL.—Judge J. Clyde Nelson, of Sharpsburg, this county, enjoys the distinction of having read every book he could obtain, either by purchase or loan, and he is now doubtless the most extensive reader in this section of the State. His range of reading includes poetry, history, biography, fiction and current literature, and he averages twenty-five books per year, without in the least neglecting his numerous other duties. Since early childhood he has had a particular fondness for reading, and he indulges it insofar as his time and means will permit.

But a peculiarity about Judge Nelson's reading, and one that differentiates him from others who read for pleasure or instruction, is his certainty of detecting any error, typographical or otherwise, that may appear in the book he reads. That he is connoisseur in correct punctuation, the use of good English, construction of sentences, paragraphing, and other such requisites of modern high-class literature, is attested by the fact that during the past five years he has never failed to find errors in every book perused by him.

Recently Judge Nelson has been writing the publishers of books in which he finds errors, calling their attention to the same, or else he has reconstructed some sentences, or made other changes, with the idea that he would thus help the publishers have, by letter, acknowledged Judge Nelson's correctness, and have recognized his ability by incorporating in the next edition of the book the correction or alteration suggested by him. He has received from several publishers offers of the position of proof-reader, corrector or reviser of manuscript, or book editor in their establishment, and he is seriously thinking of accepting one of these offers soon.

Besides possessing a liberal education, Judge Nelson is a graduate from the law department of the Northwestern University, Chicago. He served as Police Judge of the town of Sharpsburg and also Town Attorney several terms. Yet he is a young man, being only thirty-eight years old. He is a veteran of the World, a local paper published at Sharpsburg, and his editorial duties, embracing the preparation and proofreading of all matter for the paper, together with an inborn treit to have everything exactly right, has developed in him the professional that may soon make him a valuable man for some large publishing house.

drying up for want of water, and that it is too late now to make a full crop of corn, no matter if it does rain. To us it appears that a promisee e worse drouth than in 1901. In that year early corn had sufficient rain in the fore part of the season to make something, but this year early corn is a failure already, as there hasn't been sufficient moisture to keep it growing properly since the ground dried out after the wet season during the first half of April. Never did the ground get so hard and the clods prove so untreatable.

Grass was unusually forward in March and better during the month than it has ever been since.

Wheat is yielding at the threshers a half a crop. Wherever the wheat was grazed in the early spring the yield has been very light, sometimes not worth harvesting.

Clover hay where it was e first cutting since sowing was a good crop when the stand had been good, but timothy was light.

Oats have been almost e failure.

Tobacco has a chance yet if plenty of rain falls, but it will be necessary for frosts to come late to enable it to mature.

In some parts, especially on White Oak and in the Wyoming sections, tenants are leaving and many have thrown up their crops to seed work elsewhere; others are talking of doing the same.

The prospects are scarcity of feed, of course, has knocked the price out of live stock.

It is said that the northern part of the county is in a worse condition than in the neighborhood of this town.

Gardens in town are doing no good.

Savoyard's Letter.

(Louisville Post.)

About a year ago, and even a year before, it was proclaimed from the housetops that a certain class of postoffice officials were tired of the presence of Eugene F. Loud, of California, in the National Legislature, and that they had raised a huge fund with which to buy Mr. Loud's defeat of the vatere of the Fifth California district. The thing was done openly and boastfully, and a man was dispatched to San Francisco with the boodle. He got as far as Texas, when the Postoffice Department was aroused to a sense of decency. If not to a sense of duty, and he was ordered back, but the boodle continued the journey, and did its corrupt work. Mr. Loud's defeat was bought, and the nation deprived of an able, vigilant and honest public servant.

That was done in the noonday and with a flourish of trumpets. The executive department invaded the legislative department and bought a seat in Congress. When it was suggested that the President dismiss the ring leaders, what did they do? Why, they defied him, and declared that if he did Nobody [illegible] cadent was set toes men hoped to retain [illegible] National Legislature he [illegible] meddle with the graft of office executive employes.

With that episode in mind nobody was greatly surprised when numerous scandals were unearthed in the Postoffice Department. The whole establishment is now under suspicion. That there is wonderful extravagance is admitted by everybody, and that there is wholesale corruption is suspected by everybody. It appears into the shade the Star Route scandal of twenty years ago; but there has been a leap of progress since then, and it is not so safe an enterprise to loot the government as it was in those days. Investigations are more liable to investigate and prosecutions more likely to convict. One thing is certain, and that is that many millions have either been stolen or been suffered to go to waste. The Postoffice Department ought to turn a surplus into the Treasury instead of complaining of a deficit. If administered on business, instead of political, principles, it would be a money-making concern. But the establishment has been a political machine for 100 years, and will ramain a political machine for many years to come; but there are some unhappy heodlore standing round these days.

If the Postoffice Department wastes it is only waste at the edge. It compered with the waste of the lung practiced by the Pension Office; but the Pension Office has few or no friends. Many left the Pension Office that establishment has been administered on political principles with eyes for votes. Both parties are responsible. It was a Democratic House that tried to buy the soldier votes by means of the arrears bill, and that measure cost the taxpayers of the country more than half a billion, and will cost them more than a billion additional before the thing is done with. It never made a friend for a vote; but did make tens of thousands of Republican votes. Then there was the dependent pension bill, that cost hundreds of millions. Neither did that make a single Democratic vote, but it was a most efficient recruiting officer for the g. a. p. Grant and Garfield said $90,000,000 was too much for pensions. The regular appropriation is way above $100,000,000 more than that. Nobody objects to paying pensions to the men who fought the war, but there is never a soffee cooler who is not a pensioner or seeking to be a pensioner.

Oliver Cromwell administered the government of England at an expense not exceeding the amount Charles II. paid out in pensions to his worthless courtiers. What Charles lavished on Berbera Villiers would have paid and subsisted a [illegible] England [illegible] be courted by every cabinet of Europe. For the England of Charles Continental Europe bed nothing but contempt. That was the difference between honest government and corrupt government, between frugality and extravagance. When Napoleon Bonaparte found a men stealing from his government he ordered a platoon of grenadiers to put the thief out of the way, and it was a truth that a corrupt contractor who dealt with Napoleon was in more deager than the soldier of the grand army who participated in the hevoc of Eylau, or the grenadier of the Imperial Guard who made the charge at Wagram. Nobody got something for nothing from the government of the Corsican conqueror. He was firm in the belief that it was the duty of Frenchmen to support the Empire, and not the duty of the Empire to support Frenchmen.

It is not possible that our government—except our municipal establishments—is as corrupt as England under the Stuarts or France under the Bourbons; but ours is a sadly extravagant government. It costs nearly $700,000,000 a year. Our pension roll costs more than the German army or the English navy. It is twice as much as all the expenditures of the government when Buchanan was President. At the assessed valuation of the State of Kentucky, the pension roll would cut up all the property, real, personal and mixed, of that State in three or four years. While the South pays her part of the taxes, the North reaps nearly all the benefit arising from the pension grab.

But government, even the best and the honestest, is ever costly. It is like a doctor's bill or a drug bill. You know that it is necessary, but you feel that there ought to be a way to avoid the payment—an honorable way. But there will be doctor bills and drug bills as long as there is disease, and there will be governments as long as men remains uncivilized. When men finds himself in nature's disease doctors and druggists will have to find other callings. When men finds himself immune to reperity and injustice government will be a useless job. There will be no use for armies and navies when men take as much trouble to keep from injuring their neighbors as they now try to keep their neighbors from injuring them. When ell of us know the right, and are disposed to do the right, there will be no use for courts of justice. Nobody will violate the law, and the statutes of crimes and punishments will become as useless as the tower of Babel and as much of a curiosity.

But that dey is a long way off. The armies and navies of our gen- Emperor of Germany talks and thinks so much wer as Rudolph of Hapsburg practiced. France would cross the Rhine tomorrow if she thought she could stay there. England has notified the world that the Persian gulf is an English lake and that the rest of the world can go fer itself accordingly unless it wants a fight. Russia is marching to her destiny, and Russia interpreta her destiny to be universal dominion of the terrestrial globe.

And it may be remarked that Uncle Sam has long coot tells, and is rather impatient for somebody to have the impudence to step on them. A big-war with somebody of our size, or, better, two of one size, would be mighty popular in these United States of Amerion right now. SAVOYARD.

I dropped in at Uncle Dick's cabin to get warm," he said, "and after I had left him and was going to the city, I met Herbert Wright between there and the city."
"Who is Uncle Dick?"
"He is an old hunter who lives by himself in a cabin in the Bayou Woods. Doesn't have much to do with the world, but he's always very glad to see anybody who comes to his place.
"Where is his cabin?"
"It's on the long road through the Bayou Woods."
"You know Herbert Wright?"
"Yes. I hate known him since we were boys."
"Did you stop and talk any?"
"It was bitterly cold, and he seemed almost frozen. I spoke to him and asked him where he was going; that was all."
"Did he reply?"
"He did."
"What did he say?"
"He said he was going to Uncle Dick's."
"What time was it when you saw him?"
"It was about a quarter past five, I think."
"Did you notice any weapon or bludgeon about him?"
"I think he carried a stout stick."
While this witness was giving his testimony, a detective came hurriedly into the room and called the chief of police aside. They engaged in a short conversation for some minutes. When the chief returned to his place he whispered something into the ear of the coroner, who listened attentively, bowed, and then resumed the proceedings.
A witness was next produced who had seen Herbert Wright in town about 5:30 o'clock of the day of the murder. The witness was in a saloon at the time, had seen Wright enter, pour out a very large drink of whisky and gulp it down.
"Did he pay for it?"
"Yes."
"What was his appearance?"
"He was either nervous or very cold. He had a bundle under his arm which I took for groceries."
After this witness had been examined, Wade whispered the chief that he considered it a pretty hard case against young Wright.
"You still backer after the mysterious startles, do you?"
"Yes."

...ed ...ady to ...ransaction was therefore ...ut o'clock, as that was ...closing time. The description ...given by the clerk tallies with young Wright's appearance, and the giving ...of a fictitious name aroused my ...suspicions. A visit to Neckar's pawnshop revealed the fact that under ...the above name a customer had pawned another watch under the name of Jowatt, and it was done shortly after my six clerks had obtained from the pawnbrokers the various articles and turned them over to the chief.
The witness then identified the articles already offered in evidence as those which he had obtained from the pawnbrokers.
Neckar and the clerk from Rosenthal's were then introduced, and they identified Wright as the young man who under the name of Jowatt had pawned the watches and other articles.
The testimony was completed with the evidence of the sheriff and the coroner's jury. The material point in their testimony was that they, with the permission of Mrs. Wright, and in her presence, had gone through all the private papers of her husband and had found no will. The significance of this fact was, of course, brought to the attention of the jury by the coroner, who stated that in the absence of a will Mr. Wright's property would be divided without prejudice between his children, and consequently Herbert Wright was a direct beneficiary by his father's death.
The testimony given by the officers produced a profound impression not only on the jury, but on the crowd assembled there. Even Warde, who had been inclined to entertain a belief in Wright's innocence, was staggered for a moment. It was not an easy matter to overthrow an explanation of the damning facts that had been brought to light. As for Herbert Wright himself, he seemed to be dazed by the chain of circumstantial evidence which had been wrought around him. His face was a strong psychological study, and upon it a growing horror depicted itself. Was it the despair of innocence surrounded by a network of apparently unanswerable accusations? Every bit of testimony seemed to embody a degree of guilt. Or was it the stupor of guilt detected that appeared in his face?
The coroner's jury made no attempt to construct any theory of innocence, but brought in a verdict that Mr. Wright came to his death from blows and wounds inflicted by his son.

Reflections of a Bachelor.

There is no way of getting out of a love affair that succeeds like not getting in.
The way to praise anything a woman wears is to tell her how pretty she looks in it.
The fun that a woman gets out of an argument is the chance to cry, and a man to get mad.
When a woman confesses her age she thinks to let you know how much younger she is than her younger sister.
A woman can stand being kissed against her will all right, but I makes her very indignant if you don't pretend to use force.—N. Y. Press into the room. Decidedly her appearance on the stand was thus far the most interesting event of the trial. Warde studied the face of the young woman with not a little curosity, for the secluded life which her jealous father had forced his family to lead made her the object of much speculative curiosity throughout the community. She was slender and graceful of figure, with a rather pale face, refined features and dark gray eyes. Although dressed in mourning, the expression of her face was haughty and unattractive, rather than sorrowful. It would have been somewhat difficult to imagine her as having shed many tears over the crime that had been committed. Warde fancied that her features contained the proofs of a disgraceful tragedy; for the face that ought by right of youth and beauty to have been soft, was somewhat cold and unattractive, and one gifted with psychologic powers might have been able to construct a family history with its secrets, its injustices, its cruelties in the set lines of that young girl's fair and beautiful face.

It was soon evident that whatever sympathies she had were enlisted in behalf of her brother. Several times in the course of the examination she seemed on the point of saying something condemnatory of her father, but the tragic character of his death restrained her. Her self possession was fruitless in its frigidity, and she answered all the questions put to her with the utmost precision.
After the usual preliminary questions she was asked: "What were the relations existing between your father and your brother?"
"My father entertained a feeling of the most unbecoming hostility toward Herbert; in fact, he seemed to hate him more than he did any human being on earth."
"And your brother—how did he feel toward your father?" asked the coroner, politely.
"That you had better ask him."
"Did he ever express himself violently toward your father in your presence?"
"No; he has complained at times of my father's treatment, but that was all."
"Do you know of any reason why he should have been interested in bringing about your father's death?"
"I do not. He could hardly have expected my father to leave him anything."
"Have you examined your father's will?"

"No, sir; I have not given the subject a thought."
"You do not know then, whether he left a will or not?"
"I do not."
"Do you know, Miss Wright," asked the coroner, quietly, "what kind of a watch your father had?"
"Yes, sir."
"Describe it."
"It was a plain gold watch without any ornamentation whatever. I don't think it had even his name on it. It was presented to him a few years ago by a Creole friend of his."
"Was there any sort of inscription on it?"
"Yes; the French word 'Amitie' was engraved inside the case."
"You would know the watch then if you saw it?"
"Certainly."
From a small bundle which had been handed him by the chief of police the coroner took out two watches. One of these he examined for a moment and then passed it to the witness with the question: "Was your father's this watch?"
"Yes; it is my father's."
"Did this other one also belong to him?"
A second watch of a handsome design was handed to her, which she was positive she had never seen before. It was a gold watch and no inscription of any kind, but it bore the number 9,999 and was of a Swiss make.
The coroner then handed her a pair of sleeve buttons, a diamond pin and a pocket knife. Miss Wright identified the sleeve buttons and the knife as her father's, but did not think the pin was his. He never wore jewelry of any kind, and she had never seen the pin before.
While this part of the examination was going on Miss Wright was nervous and wore a startled air, which might be interpreted either as an indication that she had been subjected to a line of examination that she had not expected, or a fear that she was giving testimony to the detriment of her brother in some way which was inscrutable to her. Grasping thus in the dark, she was growing more and more agitated, and her self possession was near to breaking down completely. Fortunately she was not subjected to any further inquisitorial process, and, half dazed with fear and uncertainty, she left the stand and quitted the room, casting as she did so a glance full of questioning despair upon her brother.
The full significance of this testimony was now brought out by placing on the stand Detective Fenton. He told a very plain and damaging story.
"Yesterday afternoon," he said, "Herbert Wright was arrested on suspicion of murder. I searched him, and found in his pocket a watch. It was a gold watch, and bore the number 9,999. I showed it to Miss Wright, and she identified it as her father's watch. I also found in his pocket a pair of sleeve buttons, a diamond pin and a pocket knife. REPUBLICAN TICKET.

Morris B. Belknap, of Louisville, Nominated For Governor.

The Platform Adopted Endorses the Administration of President Roosevelt and Denounces Assassination and Lawlessness.

Louisville, July 16.—The Kentucky republican convention was called to order Wednesday afternoon. The Belknap forces nominated Maj. Wm. C. Owens for temporary chairman and he was elected by a vote of 1,571 to 575 in favor of Charles Blanford.
Ex-Gov. Bradley introduced a resolution condemning the administration of President Roosevelt and it was adopted by a standing vote.
The committees on credentials, rules and resolutions were then announced and the convention adjourned until Thursday morning.
Louisville, Ky., July 17.—The republican state convention Thursday evening nominated the following ticket: For governor, Morris Belknap, of Louisville, lieutenant governor, J. B. Wilhoit, of Ashland; treasurer, John R. Dean, of Hardin; auditor, Geo. W. Welsh, of Danville; attorney general, W. M. Beckner, of Winchester; secretary of state, J. C. Speight, of Mayfield.
A second day of picturesque political maneuverings in the state convention of the Kentucky republicans failed to culminate in the final grand surprise of a winning dark horse, whose name was to be announced at 4 o'clock to followers during Wednesday's sessions set the political managers to speculating. Mr. Morris B. Belknap, of Louisville, a wholesale merchant, widely known throughout the country, received the nomination for governor on the first ballot. His delegates, contrary to predictions, stuck to him, though how much of their tenacity was charged to the encouragement by Gov. Wm. O. Bradley that he was not a candidate can only be conjectured. Mr. Belknap was nominated after an enthusiastic supporter of Mr. Bradley had placed the former governor in nomination, and the followers of Augustus E. Willson had tacitly withdrawn the man supposed to be Mr. Belknap's nearest competitor, by failing to present his name. The threatened stampede to Bradley was averted in an emphatic declaration after an enthusiastic supporter of Mr. Bradley had placed the former governor in nomination, and the followers of Augustus E. Willson had tacitly withdrawn the man supposed to be Mr. Belknap's nearest competitor, by failing to present his name. The Delightful Land of Uprightness

There the Best and Sweetest in Life is Realized

Sermon by the "Hig'way and Byway" Preacher.

(Copyright, 1903, by J. M. Edson.)

Chicago, Sunday, July 19, 1903.

Text:—Teach me to do Thy will; for Thou art my God; Thy Spirit is good; lead me in the Land of Uprightness.—Psalm 143:10.

DID you know there was such a land? And would you not like to spend a summer there? There is such a land. The sun shines brighter there, the birds sing more sweetly; the flowers exhale the perfume of Heaven and are tinted with dainty hues which are mixed on the palette of the angels under the guiding eye of God; the grass, how fresh and green! the trees, how joyfully they wave their branches in the spring breeze, and more their spreading leaves to whispering zones of praise! the lakes, how placid and cool, as the boats ride safely upon their bosom and glide hither and thither! the streams, how they sing over the rocks and by the mossy banks! and the fish, as one sits upon the bank! the darting sparkles—how they sparkle as they leap from their cool hidden depths and grade the rainbow and add to the beauty of the insects in the air, from the great dragon flies down to the tiniest speck which can be seen only by the aid of the curiously perfect little creature of God's handiwork! the tiny creature nesting in the grasses and amongst the leaves, as they come at will to and from their cities and in activity and industry which is phenomenal! the beasts of field and forest, as they come at will to and from the haunts of man—all Nature in the Land of Uprightness is fuller, more wonderful, more interesting! Why! is there to whom the summer does not come with swaying voice and lure away somewhere into the restful depths of Nature's realm? Who is there who is so dead to the perennial freshness and charm of Dame Nature that there comes no longing for gain a closer intimacy with her during the vacation rest? Man universally delights in the restfulness and freshness of Nature, but nowhere is Nature found with so manifold charms and such sanctifying influences as in the Land of Uprightness. The one who steps into the Land of the Narrow Gate into the Land of Uprightness is heard to exclaim with exultant voice: "I never knew the sun was so glorious, its light so full; the songs of the birds so like Heavenly music, and the rustle of the leaves and the hum of nature so like angels' wings! the great variety and beauty and variety of the flowers of the field so evidently betokening the impress of the Divine hand! It is a new world!" Dear friend, did you know there was such a land as the Land of Uprightness, and that in that land old things had passed away and all things become new? Did you know that it was your privilege to walk there, and that until you do you are missing untold joy and privilege, and blessing? It is only in the Land of Uprightness that you can realize your best and highest. Then let us go into the Land of Uprightness together.

IT is the other day I noticed in the hands of a young lady sitting opposite to me in the train a transportation folder gotten up in attractive form, describing summer resorts and giving information as to the r[illegible] steamboats leading thereto. I [illegible] deeply absorbed, and one did [illegible] to be told that she was planning [illegible] vacation outing. The claims of the various places as to attractions and advantages were evidently being carefully considered. She wanted to go to the place where she could have the best time. The location of the place to which she felt she would go was carefully noted on the map and the route over which she would travel was picked out. It was a matter of the greatest importance as far as that time. She was utterly lost to all bout her, so absorbed was she in the thought of going away. I want to speak of the Land of Uprightness our first query is as to its location. Where is the Land of Uprightness? We next want to know what attractions and advantages that land has to offer over the land in which we are now dwelling, and then we want to know their hardness? are there never any ungratified longings and desires? are all those who dwell in that land prosperous and influential, as the world counts success and power?" No, you understand us. When one takes counsel with God and measures conditions with Him, the trials and afflictions of this present world which are encountered in the Land of Uprightness are as nothing to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us." Jesus in the Land of Uprightness they suffered. He knew what it was to be in want; He was despised and rejected of men; He was persecuted and crucified, yet at the close of His life He talked to His disciples of the joy and peace which He had found in the Land of Uprightness, and told them that He returned, He would come

ANNOUNCEMENT.

For Magistrate.

We are authorized to announce Thomas J. Jones as a candidate to succeed himself as Magistrate in Owingsville district, No 6, subject to the action of the Democratic party.

ALLIE YOUNG is reconciled to the Louisville catastrophe. Like the men's wife to dying—he just had to be.

BILL O'REAR by a short speech showed he was still the biggest Republican in Kentucky by all odds. Swindling Dems.

ROCKEFELLER played bear in Pierpont Morgan's stock preserves last week. Morgan wouldn't 'a' thought it of Rocky.

UNCLE SAM is shrewd about presenting that Jewish Maiden to Russia than a boy is about delivering his first love letter to his inamorata.

BELMAR got the nomination on the first ballot. Individually he seems to be all right, but he trains with the Sopp element, which is all wrong.

FOLK continues to unearth legislative corruption in St. Louis and the Missouri legislature. He will get himself disliked by the boodlers if he isn't careful.

MAJOR WM. C. OWENS, Chairman, and Judge W. M. Beckner, nominee for Attorney General, figured conspicuously in the Republican State convention. They are ex-Democrats.

JOHN BULL thinks maybe he has a claim to some islands off Borneo that Uncle Sam knows he owns. When two notorious land-grabbers like these fall out look out for squalls.

MOB law is growing in prevalence if not favor throughout the country. It is not a good omen, but the legal machinary of law not being properly used is largely responsible for it.

BRYAN has become such a back number that he can only hope to attract attention by abusing Cleveland and other Democrats who voted for Cleveland ism, which is synonymous with Democracy.

MRS. DORA BAUCK, recently widowed, who becomes noted as the child wife of Gen. Cassius M. Clay, is so averse to newspaper notoriety now that she threatened a reporter with a pistol and chased him with a broom. Hurrah for Dora!

JUDGE —— SHEPHERD, of Winchester, and Congressman W. C. Owens, of Glasgow, were ex-Democrats ossapicuous at the State Republican convention. They are bigger than the men who are running the Democratic party now.

THE now celebrated Jett-White serial will begin at Cynthiana next Monday. The whole United States will watch its progress with absorbing interest and the lovers of justice will hope the guilty will receive the punishment they deserve.

THE dragnet at Washington is catching important Postoffice Department criminals right along. Uncle Sam has been paying dearly for postal appliances bought by these scamps. With rascality eliminated maybe taxation wouldn't be quite so high.

T. PLATT wants Senator Aldrich, of Rhode Island, for Roosevelt's running mate in 1904. Platt is deep, so there is no telling what he has against Aldrich, who would be a figurehead in the powerful body of which he is the chief member at present.

THE makers of a certain cash register sold Uncle Sam 250 machines at $150 each because he was their Uncle, whereas they sold them in the open market at $125 each. The same register can only sell one such as those sold Uncle Sam. But then some of Uncle's clerks needed the take-out.

THE colored ministers of Evansville, Ind., adopted a sensible course in passing resolutions condemning the shiftless and idle negroes of that city and asking the police to deal harshly with them. White people everywhere respect worthy colored people, but they are growing more intolerant of the onery and criminal element, who are a bane to them and a blot on the community. There is no future for the negro except as he makes it for himself by a life of integrity and usefulness. The sooner he learns that he can secure a place for himself only by deserving it the better it will be for him. It is no excuse for the negro that there are vicious and shiftless white people too; the latter are not respected by the good white people. As for social equality that is a barren ideality, as long as human nature remains what it is, and it has never changed in that respect since recorded history began.

CAPT. B. J. EWAN made his will and set his affairs in order like a person whose life was in the utmost jeopardy before he went to attend the special court at Jackson as a witness this week. Old Kentucky will learn to do the thing better some day.

THE special term of the Breathitt Circuit Court, Judge Redwine presiding, began at Jackson Monday to investigate the burning of Capt. Ewen's hotel, the attempt to bribe Ewen, and the assassination of Cox. Judge Redwine, in an interview at Lexington with the manager of the Herald, talks like he is going to have a thorough investigation of those matters and says if the grand jury chosen does not do its duty he would set it aside and have another chosen. That is the right sort of talk and if it bears proper fruit the State will rejoice.

The Home Telephone Co. is running a branch line from the Maysville pike via the Gudgell school-house to the Springfield neighborhood.

The meeting at the M. E. Church here closed Sunday night with 7 additions to the church. Rev. Savage has been here two weeks and preached a series of interesting sermons; all denominations seemed to have enjoyed the meeting and regretted to see it close. There was perfect order during the entire services. While the additions were few, the church has been strengthened, and we hope spiritually benefited by the meeting. We hope that Rev. Savage's stay among us has been pleasant and that he will come again in the early future.

Savoyard's Letter.

[Louisville Post.]

Washington, July 6.—It is said that certain negroes of Maryland have sent a paper to Comto Cassini, the Russian Ambassador at this capital, asking him to employ his diplomatic office to stop the crime of lynching in our country and plead the recent barbarity in Delaware in avoidance to the reproach of the massacre at Kishineff. One would argue that those Maryland negroes had read the recent manifesto of Gov. Beckham and had concluded to drop his logic and fling the pieces at the diplomatic corps. The Kentucky Democracy would have been a fugitive and a vagabond on the face of the earth had it not drawn a capital prize in the lottery of assassination in January, 1900, and it is by no means astonishing that the man who drew the office of Lieutenant Governor in the lottery of theft should wave the bloody shirt to distract attention from the bloody situation on the Democratic side of the bridge. That woe a gratuitous, a ferocious, an inexcusable assault the Governor of a great Commonwealth made says no matter how much it rains It was not a oblivalous thing to do.

But this Russian business is wanting in the very important element of analogy. In the first place the Jews of Kishineff have kindred in our country, and American negroes have no kindred in Russia. In the second place, there was no provocation for the massacre of Kishineff, while there was every provocation for the work of that Delaware mob. In Russia men were murdered because they were members of a certain race; in America men are lynched because they are guilty of a certain crime. It would be excellent if toleration maintained in Russia; it were lovely if the law was supreme in America; but there is a important element in mankind called h is not always sometimes terrible. As evidence of this last, there was only five pounds of 200 pounds of fiend left in Delaware for the Coronor to hold a "quest" on. Horace Greeley advised those negroes who would "locate" the race to go to New Jersey and raise potatoes. These Maryland negroes will find that better than appealing to a subject of a great kingdom to ameliorate their condition is the cessation of the revolting crime that leads to lynchings. There will be lynchings in this country until it is safe for women and girls to walk the highway without danger of assault. Every man must agree that it would be better to let the law take its course, but it is much easier to know the right than to do the right.

The Czar's uncle throws up to us that there was a Russian fleet in New York bay in 1863. That is a piece of chimney cornar history that is frequently brought out by dealers in the ridiculous and the marvelous. I suppose there was a Russian fleet in New York harbor in 1863, and I suppose it was not an accident that it was there. It accomplished its mission, and there are a heap of excellent people who really believe that the presence of that fleet in American waters saved the country from intervention on the part of England in our war of '61-65. That fleet had about as much effect on the conduct of England in 1862 as Coxey's army had on the policy of Great Britain in 1894. Perhaps Mr. D. Ford, A. G. P. A., Cincinnati, O., or G. W. BARNE D. P. A., Lexington, Ky.

Columbia dis... Coxey's veterans in jail.

And England would have sunk that Russian fleet with just as little compunction. England did not interfere in our war simply because she was for the Union. That is the whole story. That was not a pro-slavery man in all England, and Exeter Hall and Scotland would have gone into riot, if not into rebellion, had the English admiralty attempted to betray ordinary sympathy in behalf of the South. But when we insulted her flag, and took Mason and Slidel from one of her ships, England got ready to fight, and she was in earnest. Abraham Lincoln and the Prince Consort got us out of that squeeze. Where was the Russian fleet then? And what could it have done wherever it was?

Russia has made a heap out of her fleet, that the English squadron at Halifax could have disposed of even as Schley disposed of the Spaniards forty years after. All that the South desired at the head of England was to raise the blockade. With her ports open the South could have fought for twenty years. Her cotton would have filled her treasury and armed and equipped her troops and fed them. Without the blockade to aid, Grant could never have taken Richmond, and Sherman would not have got past Dalton. One curious thing about England's attitude in 1861-65 is that Gladstone, a Southern sympathiser, was ever more popular at the North than at the South, while Disraeli, a Northern sympathiser, was always more popular at the South than at the North. And this feeling continued until both eminent men were dead and there was no secret as to their views of our great revolution.

It has been related that a slight change in the views of the Southern leaders would have made Robert Toombs President of the Confederacy, and it was said that Toombs was ready to pledge to England and France every pound of cotton grown in the South for ten years—that is, that nabody but the English and French spinners would be permitted to buy in the South or ship from the South a single bale. In return England and France were to keep Southern ports open and send half a million soldiers to reinforce Lee and Johnston. No doubt that is a crock and [illegible] The Southern [illegible] sold—promised to stop the war and secure Southern independence if the Confederacy if he would only emancipate the negro first. Mr. Davis returned answer that his lordship did not understand the Southern people, and had forgotten what the war was about.

Russia had nothing in the world to do with the result. For all practical purposes, she was a dead log. Like all wars, final victory inclined to the stronger side. England helped both sides and made money out of both. Russia would have done the same had she been in a fix to do it. So would Germany and France, just as Missouri stood by England with rubber for Boer war and sent orators to Congress to sing about great chapters of ignorance touching the merits that struggle.

It would enliven things if the Russian Ambassador should plead the Delaware lynching as a set-off and counterclaim against the Kishineff massacre. SAVOYARD.
